

GUIDELINES FOR AUTHORS

Submissions to the Indian Journal of Law and Technology will be reviewed for the following:

Scope and Relevance of Article

The article must be based on the interface between law and technology (see illustrative list of areas on the 'About' page) and must possess some novelty with respect to presentation or analysis. Content of the article must be suitable for a variety of readers – students, academics and professionals working in the field and should be relevant to present debates in technology law, policy or regulation. If not novel in scope, the paper must build on existing literature to present a novel argument or perspective on a particular issue.

Developing Country Perspective

The Journal strives to promote scholarship in the area of law and technology with a developing country focus to track and assess the impact of emerging technology law and policy issues on countries in various stages of development. A comparative study is encouraged, although alternate forms of treatment are acceptable if relevant to developing countries.

Quality Language and Style

Articles are assessed for thoroughness in treatment and research and logical flow in argument. There must be a balanced coverage of different positions and associated issues must be given due consideration based on the scope of the article. The prescribed word count must be adhered to and there must be consistency in style and tone. Language ought to be formal and clear, adhering to the Submission Guidelines of the Journal.
